A Pen Picture of Mahone The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Record writes:

"I thought the Living Skelton had escaped from the Dime Museum as I came up behind a thin little figure of a man on a street cor-ner to-day. He wore the first seersucker suit, narrow blue and white stripes, I have yet seen out of doors this summer, and the wind blowing it tightly against his body revended the sharp outlines of an extraordina ry form, as well as the trimly covered feet, whose neat prettiness declared their iden-tity. It was 'Mahone, Virginia,' as he still registers and signs his name. He wore a fine Panama bat with an unusually wide brim, and his gray heard flowed pictur esquely down from it like Florida moss. He has not changed apparently at all since he came into promience ten years ago. His shrewd little Irish face has no more wrinkles, his piratical bair and beard are no wilder or grayer. He still wears plaited shirt bosoms and ruffled wristbands and lace-like scarfs. He still talks and walks with a wiry nerv-ousness which seems like vigor, and his mind has lost nothing of its cunning. At Chicago, he was like Quay, one of the half dozen managers of the Sherman anti Blaine canvass. By every means in his power, good and bad, he fought the Blaine men in the Virginia delegation and on the floor of Fighting them, he had, of the convention. course, to fight the movement to nominate Harrison which the Blaine men carried through. If Mahone and Quay had had their way Sherman would have been nominated and Harrison would have been prac-ticing law at the old stand to this day. But the Blaine men—and no less those in the Virginia delegation than those elsewherenominated Harrison.

Thereupon Mahone sprang nimbly over, "Thereupon manone sprang nimbly over, and became and has ever since continued a supporter of Harrison, and, therefore, has claimed and received full control over the Federal patronage of Virginia, to the absolute exclusion of the Blaine men in the Virginia delegation, who helped to neminate Harrison against Mahone's utmost efforts. Now, this is a great achievement. When Garfield and Arthur turned over the patronage of Virginia to Mahone in 1881 Mahone was the real representative of the entire re-publican party of Virginia. It was, perhaps, fit under the feudal rules of the spoils system that the recognized boss of the party in power for Virginia should say who should and who should not serve the people in federal offices within its to all that he got. But nowadays be represents only the Mahone machine in Virginia All the popular leaders of the republican party are opposing him, and the rank and file have no voice in his proceedings. When a State convention is to meet Mahone writes to his personal representative in each district, giving them the names of the men whom he desires sent as delegates to the whom he deeres sent as delegates to the convention. These men and no others are sent. When they get into convention Mahone gives them a list of the officers of the convention, which they adopt, and then their resolutions and then their candidates are served to them and swallowed by them. There is no system like it now extent so for severy observation case. It is the tant so far as my observation goes. It is the last relic of old-fashioned boss rule. The wishes of the republican party, to say noth. ing of the people of Virginia, are deliberately suppressed or ignored with all the frankness imaginable, for Mahone, like the old bosses, is amazingly frank. He has no qualms of conscience, for he has no con-science, and having no feelings of delicacy or propriety, makes no pretensions to Sunday-school principles in politics.

"Bribery is all right, bulldozing is all right -the end always justifies the means, so why make any bones of it? Whatever else he is, Mahone is not a hypocrite, and in the ab-sence of prominent positive virtues we must make, I suppose, the most of this negative one. He is just as frank in politics as he is open in his personal habits. He drinks and swears and plays poker in the most natural manner possible. He thinks nothing of staying up all night at a card table. Yet and wholly unrepresentative of the republi-can party as a political organization, how-ever he may represent the babits of its politicians, has been selected by President Harrison to represent his administration in dealing out the offices allotted to Virginia. His power over Virginia patronage is now far more absolute and exclus-ive than it was under Garfield and GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

'And that would Ice! be ridiculous, said Mahone, and so it would from his point of view. Meanwhile, Riddleberger and Cameron and Groner John S. Wise, and all the other 'rebels,' as Mahone calls them, will freeze to death in > tion by his own strength alone. He frankly admits that without Senator Quay's help he could not have climbed to such unrivaled power. Of course Quay in helping Mahone looks to the future rather than the past. He is not thinking so much of what Mahone did at Chicago as of what Mahone for a new candidate; as vet, I believe, un-known to himself, and he will need the votes of all his friends to nominate and elect him. It is an interesting illustration of the relative influence of Quay and Blaine just now that Blaine's Virginla friends who sacrificed themselves at Chicago for his love appealed in vain to him to prevent Mabone from getting such a grip as he now has on Virginia."
